I'll bring you lemons with your tea
I'll kiss your eyes
'til they open to see another morning
if I ever get out of this place I'll part the curtains to let the sunlight in and watch the shadows melt from your skin I will see this
if I ever get out of this place

And when you leave my arms to work in some high-rise I will walk the streets and search in strangers' eyes for the secret there that always hid from me the one that lets you all move in harmony and when you come home to sit by my side I'll have learned nothing but at least I tried I won't stop searching

if I ever get out of this place

No I won't hate the ones who put me here that there may be no God will be my only fear I will not tear the air like some unchained beast I'll have no sharpened stones in those pockets filled with peace

And then I'll love you like a symphony
And come the morning the first thing that I'll see will be your sleeping face if I ever get out of this place
