Another starry night is above us
For the last ten thousand years it's been the same
In a moment's notice
Not a stone unturned that someone didn't claim
Who am I to know this, who am I to care

All the streets are sinking
'Cause the world goes half the speed of what it takes
And the wires from somewhere
Sending signals to our homes in outer space
Who am I to know this, who am I to care

From the warmth of being fine
To defending battle lines

In a car on the freeway
Broken down from some new form of gasoline
In the door she's waiting
Living up to every diamond in that ring
Who am I to love you, who am I to care

Another starry night is above us
Another starry night is above us
For the last ten thousand years it's been the same
In a moment's notice
Not a stone unturned that someone didn't claim
Who am I to love you, who am I to care
Who am I to know this, who am I to breathe

From the warmth of being fine
To defending battle lines
