We'd be so less fragile
If we're made from metal.
And our hearts from iron,
And our minds from steel.
If we built an armour
For our tender bodies.
Could we love each other?
Would we strive to feel?

And you want three wishes:
One to fly the heavens,
One to swim like fishes,
And then one you're saving for a rainy day
If your lover ever takes her love away.

You say you want to know her like a lover
And undo her damage, she'll be new again.
Soon you'll find that if you try to save her
It will renew her anger. You will never win.

And you want three wishes:
You want never bitter,
And all delicious,
And then one you're saving for a rainy day
If your lover ever takes her love away.

And you want three wishes:
One to fly the heavens,
One to swim like fishes,
You want never bitter,
And all delicious.
And a clean conscience,
And all it's blisses,
You want one true lover
With a thousand kisses.
You want soft and gentle and never vicious.
And then one you're saving for a rainy day
If your lover ever takes her love away.
