Once a spot beneath the waves drowning deep and yet i craved the glory, power, that i'd made another soul, another day i swam beneath the darkest shore never claiming heaven more and there i found the truth in lies where-with-all i learned to die and drown i did beneath the waves and swim once more - you might say "saved" i got to shore and climbed to sand and every grain another land i looked within and saw the men so very small and not much in but each was one and all were more in every grain upon that shore

I pitied them for being alone as i walked away to find a home and now i think as i look back that maybe they had had their track and i alone had walked away
and tho i walk alone and on they were there and i am gone
