i was born by an old streetlight where the men lean out of their windows at night and i was a lead in the orphan choir, and i sang with all my might until i grew up
too high then oh, all the notes i used to play on the double bass in the b-list ballet with only the night bugs to lead me home with their sad-luck serenade the rain was never ending, the sadness in my heart would light and glow in the dark oh this will never change, time just wears a prettier face i'm book smart, street stupid so don't look for me in confession booth, i'm with my paints and my pens and my dry vermouth trying to uncover

some small truth with these cards close to my chest
time just wears a prettier face
the rain still never ending the wonder in my heart would light and glow in it still lights and glows in the dark
