you walk down alameda shuffling your deck of trick cards over everyone like some precious only son face down, bow to the champion you walk down alameda looking at the cracks in the sidewalk
thinking about your friends how you maintain all them in a constant state of suspense for your own protection over their affection nobody broke your heart you broke your own because you can't finish what you
start
walk down alameda brushing off the nightmare you wish could plague me when i'm awake and now you see your first mistake was thinking that you could relate for one or two minutes she liked you but the fix is in you're all pretension
i never pay attention
nobody broke your heart
nobody broke your heart
if you're alone it must be you that wants to be apart
