So the clock keeps ticking but I'm not moving to the sound of breaking hearts If I stand still then I'm not noticed, together silence and me
How should it feel when the novelty is over down again, on my knees once more Should I believe that there is hope for us anyway but I don't know, I never did know

Here we stand on the verge of falling, two alike but never the same Spinning down like the wheel that's turning round again without an end I believe in a true introspection and I believe in living a lie I've been caged and the cage is burning, the key is neatly tucked away

Superstition, I keep learning, all my trust went up in smoke Sometimes when the world stops turning I know that I'm a world too soon Driven like the rain that's falling, down again, on our souls once more All these years I've been searching for shelter to save me from these gathering storms

The clock's still ticking, time comes crawling, the sound of my solitudes metronome

But it's always better than breaking hearts and to find out that you're the one to blame Still we dance in the house of the dreamer fire's eating the walls away
But one glance at the world outside and I know that I would rather burn

Down goes the sand slipping through our hands, round go the hands of our speeding clock But no time wasted when there's no time spent, no crystal ball to see where this all ends From the wheels of tragedy we never had a chance, to tear it all down and start over again Come closing in when you start closing down. I know you are, it's all coming round You closed the door while I kept it open, slammed in the face like a 2-by-4 Then came questions and then no answers, if I only could I would open the door again No words to keep our worlds together, we were always more strangers than dreamers But don't be surprised when sometime, someday a stranger may come knocking at your door
