I lay dormant,
until you made a cameo
You raised the curtains on a land I didn't know

You threw the light,
you sent my feet to hurry down the empty streets
Now they erupt into colour, and you command their beat, you say

We turn water to ice
Darkness into light
Morning into night
We turn water to ice
And we'll never belong

We're upended, living in a red glass volcano
We stay suspended and forget our lives below

We race the night,
we hunt the sea,
we run the rambling symphony
There are no lines, and no confines, we live for imagery; you say

We turn water to ice
Darkness into light
Morning into night
We turn water to ice
And we'll never belong

We turn water to ice
Lightening into fire
We'll keep running through the wild
We turn water to ice
And we'll never belong

Oh we climb! Up above the belt, over the skyline Oh it's time! To order all the mess with our narrative minds
