After 47 days they left well enough alone. The cops and the reporters

have all gone home. All that's left is legends and stories to be told.

Tired of all the questions. Tired of all the calls. Tired of explaining myself

against the wall. Funny how tragedy brings out the best in everyone. *

Standing on the shoreline, burning candles in the rain. I don't wanna

hear that garbage anymore. Watching all the flowers as they're rolling down

the

James. The dead can rest forevermore if the creek don't rise again. *

Love

burns brightest all dressed up in black with summertime just around the bend.

You handle your grief and I'll deal with mine. We'll all get along

fine. * After 47 days they left well enough alone. The cops and the reporters have all gone home. All that's left is legends and stories to be told. And I know that they're out there. I know they're watching me

and they wait for me to give myself away. But there's just a few secrets

between the river and me.
