I happen to know where the tailwind is blowing
A place to go when people say you're way too blue
If you wanna go you must keep them from knowing
Loneliness is something you're accustomed to

When you're all alone and on your own
Looking for a way to take you home
When you close your eyes and drift away
Nothing we can do to make you stay

What's written in sand disappears in the rain
We'll never show, we'll never know how close you came
It's turning to rust and it's turning to gold
I still believe and I believe I have been told

When you take your boat out to sea
You must read the signs carefully
When your saunter far away
Feel it calling you at the break of day

I happen to know where the tail wind is blowing
A place to go when people say you're way too blue
If you wanna go you must keep them from knowing
Loneliness is something you're accustomed to

When you're all alone and on your own
Looking for a way to take you home
When you close your eyes and drift away
Nothing we can do to make you stay

I don't care how it happened
I always have time for an old friend
I just have to know you're coming back again
