well I spread all the joy, spread all the joy all over the world and I just wind up here, year after year no better, just worse and I've less energy to love and to be the person I am and the people I see make me angry, not happy but it's fools like me who could take all this from a serpent's bite to a tender kiss and it's fools like me who can't live long enough to explain, or change, anything can't return to the past, before I broke that glass on the cold concrete floor I'm so frozen and stuck, feel so down on my luck locked door after locked door and there's glimpses of things, impossible springs of beauty, crystal and clear but just as I touch, just as I learn to love it's like it never was here because it's fools like me who could take all this

from a serpent's bite to a tender kiss
to explain

and it's fools like me who will watch their souls drain slowly away down invisible holes and the world lights up, then goes dark again, and again
and again

but i remember the bits, the wonderful bits so brilliant and few all colored with loves in candlelit bars (??) and colored by you and with all the fools, the millions of fools oh, one for every star I'll keep writing these tunes, and took over my blues at least until it's too hard

from a serpent's bite to a tender kiss

again
and again
and again
