A dawn rose slow and quietly from a womb of meaning
Suddenly a barren face of agony was brought to light
And it sang a cry of mankind, heart-wrenching threnody

That grew to immense heights too dreadful to describe
Still we stood with our eyes fixed into the ground

Wishing we could be somewhere far away

And the rain of tears bursted from the skies upon us -

The drowning, while shrieks beyond the centuries

Pierced our souls to the edge of death

The sun became our most dreadful enemy

Our bodies burning, still never dying

Wishing you never were stillborn with us

The starving yearning will be forever

The fading seconds, hours of struggle

The days of anger and years of never

Decades were passed by now it seemed,

'Though we were there only for a blink of an eye

Gaunt flock of mourners were walking slowly

Towards us on our way

Not a hint of a word came back to us

'Though countless times we were asking reason why

Drops of sorrow just fell from wounded eyes

To a frosty ground

Seemed to be we were watching misery of no reason

The sun became a cold twisted mirror

Reflecting terror from thousand moons

Beyond perception, beyond all reason

Shivering with horror, waiting tomorrow

To cleanse our memories, to end our suffering

Seeing it impossible ever to perceive

Momentarily myriad of misery was thrown before our

Suffering eyes

For eternities we've drifted on the seas unlooked-for

And at last as delusion of a lighthouse fills our sight

We witness a loss, running aground for a first time

Must now award the siren's song with drowning praise -

Drifting along vast waters of time, a falling night...

Night fell fast and with storm from a meaningless

grave

Tearing all that was left of our hope

Cold twilights cradle became our bleak final home -

The end of all
Our eyes had seen too much to carry on,
But still not enough to ever understand
Why are we born in here
What is our meaning here
Is there anything valueless at all
