I must admit it's a balancing act,
it looks dangerous,
that's part of it,
remember - don't look down.
Who am I standing in a crowded room,
we were pressed together,
but we're holding on,
like we're all there is.
That's all there was.

Then I flash the light,
We were drunk, we were having a fight.
Well, I was wrong, but that don't mean
you were right.
Then you played that song,
it was a thousand seconds long,
it didn't end, it seemed to play on all night - as if I remember right,
I fell asleep there.

Rainclouds passed, and darkened more,
than evening touched by raining,
for the sky had burst.
Storms had gathered in crushing lives,
I surrendered to,
The way that I remember you.
And that's all there was.

If I were forced to choose,
What I have, I have to lose,
Well I need love, that don't mean
I need you.
It started with that song,
it was a thousand seconds long.
It didn't end, because we never got through.

And did you think that I had planned it all along?
Hoping not to be alone?
Well I was there, under the edge
with a blush.
And did you leave because you thought that I would stay?

Stricken with a holy fright.
And it was clear with the night, and the cold,
now i'll never know what you're afraid of.

And when the world ends,
a thousand seconds to.
we'll watch the time pass,
climb through the high and blue.
And then we'll wait there,
a thousand seconds to.
That's when it all ends,
a thousand seconds to.
