now i'm seventeen
my school is in the country students wear trainers read the same magazines

my school is getting tiresome teachers - they're so young singling me out only like philosophy & after school the time that's what i call my own time nice girls meet nice boys end of school day while other girls go strait home talking 'bout soaps'n' that i go home alone

like it watching the nameless people surfing subways, travelling somewhere

"...nowhere..."

now i'm seventeen
i do not have a title depend on no one else busy being kind (to myself)

and have dinner in my sweet home praying again, again & again

"...peace..."

i see the same faces in school & they say that i am different i think it's an honour i say it's an honour to B different i can't go their way

"...seventeen..."
