I thought I had it figured out.
I thought the race was run.
But the end was just a mirror, and I saw myself undone.
They say you have to feel it to know it's really there.
I felt this called pain and found out life's not fair.

If I knew that life meant dying maybe I'd say no.
But as it stands my life demands into death I go.
I follow stairs down to the tomb. Into death I go.

I died a thousand deaths today in a sea of lustful sin.
Feel the bottomless pit of hell again and again.
A tear of pain flows from my eye every time I see the sun rise.
Being blind is better than when the light inside you dies.

I did not die yet I lost life's breath.
Think for yourself what I became.
Deprived at once of both my life and death.
