

The Ocean Doesn't Want Me

Oh in the days to come
â€”when marching in the shadows of dunes â€”to avoid the morning sunâ€” it's frigid in the womb.â€” â€”Half the house in ruin and half of the castle stands,â€” the tower crumbled and fell, and with it the flag,â€” a half-mast salute.

â€”â€”The footsteps that I followed end here at a spire and seemingly disappears.
The pylons at dawn were nothing but mirages, leading me to nothing.â€”
When the bell rings and when that time comes, they'll say their goodbyes,â€” but you're already gone.

â€”â€”Wind in my sails broke down the mast.
â€”Adrift on a raft as we watch the land move on.â€”â€”

Waiting, always in wait.

â€”â€”Lead me to deserts and leave me a stray.â€” Leave me with memories that won't fade away.â€” Question the sciences and questions of faith.
â€”Don't bother me, don't follow me.

Never, never, never to begin another castle with you,â€”to witness another tower tumble, tumble, down, down, down.â€”â€”â€”
