Last call, but i just kept on drinking i saw a face in the crowd, one soon i would regret so i stumbled my way towards this innocent face introducing myself as "the life this bars been needing" i saw a smile open up and i knew i had walked right in we started talking about the world and all the troubles on the way

as sad as it sounds, i was barely paying attention i only wanted one thing oh i only wanted one thing i'm sorry baby but i had to dig up them bones the night was hazy and i didn't want to spend it alone now that it's over put your clothes back on and go home go on home

now at the hotel with the view as vast as the sea we started to undress one thousand floors above the city then the calm before the storm where i had started to feel a bit guilty i just let myself know this will all be over soon now i'm not going to lie or keep from you any secrets with this sort of thing i've got issues through the roof still it takes two to dance and we both got what we wanted oh i never caught a name i can barely remember a face
