"The Impulse"

And the impulse that you can't ignore breaks like a wave onto the shore and its tearing you apart
wondering if its the beginning of the end or the end of the start
A walk on the beach, I rose for a speech a lack of words leads you feeling awkwardly you waited for the call that never came the drama reminds you that thought it brings pain

And all the time I barely laughed and never cried at all
I never understood or had the will to try and still I look the time to hit and never realized
I wish I could have seen the world through sane eyes

And the impulse that you can't ignore
breaks like a wave onto the shore
wondering if its the beginning of the end
or the end of the start
A walk on the beach, I rose for a speech
a lack of words leads you feeling awkwardly
you waited for the call that never came
the drama reminds you that thought it brings pain

And all the time I barely laughed and never cried at all
and still I look the time to hit and never realized
I wish I could have seen the world through sane eyes
And all the time I barely laughed and never cried at all
and still I look the time to hit and never realized
I wish I could have seen the world through sane eyes

See the world
See the world
See the world through these dead cataracted eyes
See the world through these dumb catatonic eyes Invision the world with such a tattered mind
Try to ignore the impulse that drives you mad
