Through long December nights we talk in words of rain
or snow,

While you, through chattering teeth, reply and curse us
as you go.

Why not spare a thought this day for those who have no
flame

To warm their bones at Christmas time?

Say Jack Frost and the Hooded Crow.

Now as the last broad oak leaf falls we beg, consider this:

There's some who have no coin to save for turkey, wine or gifts.

No children's laughter 'round the fire, no family left to know.

So lend a warm and a helping hand

Say Jack Frost and the Hooded Crow.

As holly pricks and ivy clings, your fate is none too clear.

The Lord may find you wanting; let your good fortune disappear.

All homely comforts blown away and all that's left to show

Is to share your joy at Christmas time

With Jack Frost and the Hooded Crow.

Through long December nights we talk in words of rain
or snow,

While you, through chattering teeth, reply and curse us
as you go.

Why not spare a thought this day for those who have no
flame

To warm their bones at Christmas time?

Say Jack Frost and the Hooded Crow
