

Spleen, The "Paris Spark"

We didn't care enough about the colder doubt
This passion that we couldn't live without
Take time even if you can't stop

'Cause we forgot
The day we turned into people we are not
People we are not
Don't forget we forgot
All that we gave, all that we got

When we will then be more than old
Then our memories will feel cold
Remember me, remember us
Your eyes, the sea, the sweet chaos

This time when your glance did not fear
To become hollow or insincere
When all our words knew how to fly
Over the whole Atlantic sky

Find their way to resound in the street
Of this village I have never seen
Lighted by a spark from Paris dark

When my body will search the heat
To warm you up until you sleep
When it won't be to watch the stars
We will lie down not so far

Remember me, remember us
Your eyes, the sea, the sweet chaos
When all our words knew how to fly
Over The whole Atlantic sky

Try to persist
Try to resist
There's something more that we ignore
Try to remember what we were

Of this village I have never seen
Lighted by a spark from Paris dark
