I couldnt bear your weight tonight
And its fitting
You're not listening
But you'll hear me speak for one last time
Sailing off for brighter shores
Reeled the anchor in so tight, tonight you'll realize
I'm no longer yours

And you're calling
Oh, my heart
Is far from here
You should've held it while you had it all those years
And in those streets you'll call my name
And when an echo greets your face you'll the same

For too long I've been bound
Like a frightened slave under hand and chain
Who missed his chance
But now Im breaking out
And now you've so much to say
Did you store all your apologies in the ears that never heard me till today?

And you're calling
Oh, my heart
Is far from here
You should've held it while you had it all those years
And in those streets you'll call my name
And when an echo greets your face you'll the same

Here comes the dawn
You rise alone
And every moment for a second you'll forget
And then the fog
The curtains draw
As you join the ranks of all who will regret
