I seek the signs in the stones of the street, A traveler's prayer. People brush past but our paths never meet, I'm not there. I breathe in dust so my blood finds a way, through and through. Something undone miles ahead of me, the road to you.

A yellow field sways sideways awake a slow rain gives everything you take

I watch the sun and the sun makes time, passing through. Why won't my feet just find their way, home to you. A traveler's blues fill a traveler's shoes when I've turned the wrong way - I've turned the wrong way. And if I would chose you forever, would I forever stay?

A yellow field sways sideways awake a slow rain gives everything you take...

On an old sign and faded the words fines doubled, weather worn on the road eroded and everywhere trouble.
