We dive like satellites interrupting all your friends' and neighbors' reception. And the heavenly bodies we're bouncing off so you can talk to me the whole world round.

The pavement's wet and reflecting the clouds above, they're saying "I love you."

Unfortunately that isn't what you see you think they look like flowers.

For one in my life I wish the clouds were more clear.

You're crying in front of electric guitars and you're traveling with me in my headset and my car. I kissed a girl to the sound of your song about Chicago and I crashed my car to the same song and was humming it in the hospital

I want to see without having to believe, so show me clearly and then man I'll believe. And I'll write your name on my sleeve and hang you round my neck.
And in my car my car my car my bumper sticker.

I want all the answers to life's big questions. Is that too much to ask? For once in my life I wish the clouds were more clear.
