Behind your words I see a shadow
A glimmer of pain, an anxious moment
Your questions unanswered, your crystal clear eyes Searching my heart, sighing deep inside And I cry within for your helplessness and for your beauty
Listen just once, just once my love to my thoughts for you
And let the next waves that drown you
Be pure and free from pollution

One day I'll find you. One day I'll see your face
One day I'll discover your secret, catch you out, trip you up
And then woe betide you, and then you'd better get away
And then you'll see your error, see the sadness you've become Messing with my kin, unacceptable behaviour Leave them very well alone. Leave them well alone

Never try to spy from behind a calculated image
Never try to build a new persona

Poor little thing look what you've done to your little head
Poor little thing bringing all this stuff on yourself Sitting there alone my love and understandable position
Watering the weeds that grow in someone else's bed

Never try to spy from behind a calculated image
Never try to build a new persona

Now do I really give a damn about the choices you make
I don't really think so. Not any more
After all your just the same, sitting there filling them up Creating new personas, spying like a child

Never try to spy from behind a calculated image

Never try to build a new persona
Never try to spy from behind a calculated image
Never try to build a new persona
