I've got a flashing bright pictureshow in my brain
Yeah, it feels real, but it aint the same
Snapping to my senses, now I notice the chill as I reach for the lever on my windowsill

And before I turn around so I can lie back down
Could be any given day without you, any given town

As the sun sneaks through my windowpane
Birds sing the same old song again
Lonely, lonely roads turn to busy streets
And footsteps follow their frantic feet

We all move along as if on cue
Yet I still lie here missing you
Even though I know just what to do
I still lie here missing you

And before I turn around so I can lie back down
This could be any given day without you, any given town
Any given day without you, any given town
Any given day without you, any given town

Now I know I can't find what I'm not looking for
But my head is weary and my eyes are sore
Do me a favor unforgotten friend
Sing me the same old song again

We all move along as if on cue
Yet I still lie here missing you
Even though I know just what to do
I still lie here missing you

And before I turn around to my life upside down
Could be any given day without you, any given town
Any given day without you, any given town
Any given day without you, any given town
Any given day without you, any given town
Any given day without you, any given town
