This is the end
And I can't pretend that I'm okay, I'm not okay
I can't even remember when you slithered away
And left me with this emptiness

So bring back what you said we once had
I'd pay to see a preacher like you lie
And you know I keep everything locked underground Safe and sound in this body you call on me for

We are worlds apart
And these grey hairs I've grown
Have been nursed by the number of times
I've tried to think of why this will never change

3 a.m.
I toss and turn in my bed trying to shed this skin that I am buried in
I can't even remember why I tried to tread
I tried to fight against the tide another time

So bring back what you said we once had
Oh I'd pay to see a martyr like you die

We were given the wax to burn so bright
But our love, our light, was smothered by the hands of spite

I always knew that it would end like this
I always knew we were destined to die from the start
