

Thousand Times Better, A "When The World Ends"

When the world ends do you think that
There will be people like us left
People who know what we fought for
We try to gain but then what will remain

When the world ends do you think that
There will be people like us left
People who care about where
We were and where we went

I dream of waterfalls in the sky
Who breathe life back into your hollowed eyes
And a thousand fools race for higher ground
They search for fields filled with brighter sound
And it's no coincidence that
My rebirth was on the day of my death
And the walls were built around everyone
I will see them fall before I am done

A thousand fools asked the question "why
Were we attracted to the light"
And the city's bulbs burned brilliantly
And the stars were hiding, waiting patiently
And it's no coincidence that
My rebirth was on the night of my death
And the bridges were burned just recently
You can see them still smoldering in the night

When the world ends do you think that
There will be people like us left
People who care about where
We were and where we went
