What I've seen could make the seated lose their faith
And what I've done myself has made me turn and walk away
From who I was and had intended to become in this life of mine

And I've seen the lies of the lover, and the scars of the leaver
And it's that fear and desperation turns the faithless to believer
And though I lied and lied and lied I'd not intend to decieve her again

And I cried out, take me back into your arms
Bring me home again
Take me back into your arms
And on and on and on

I went back out into the darkness to try to find my fear cause I've seen that nameless sinner in my faces in the mirror and though I call out for forgiveness it's never clear if its come or its gone

And I cried out, take me back into your arms
Bring me home again
Take me back into your arms
And on and on and on
I went home

Now we feel the scars of the lover, and the lies of the
leaver
And in our fear and desperation we are faithless, all
believer
And though we lie and lie and lie
We're not intending to decieve ourselves

And we cry out
Take me back into your arms
Bring me home again

Take me back into your arms

And on and on and on we cry out

Take me back into your arms

Bring me home again

Take me back into your arms

And on and on and on and on...
