The open wound she hides, she just keeps it boundled up and never lets it show.
She can't take much more of this but she can't let it go.
That's ok, she don't want the world

And all the things she says, he's just lying there without someone to hear her cry.
She slips off into a dream about a place to hide.
That's ok, she don't want the world

This love she feels,
and everything she's ever known
or ever thought was real.
Seems like it's got thrown away now how's she gonna live It's ok, she don't want the world

Those words he never spoke honor like the memories of all the times before.
She tried to show him love while he would only ask for more But it's ok, she don't want the world

Softly in her sleep pictures of the life she's longing for slowly appears.
She's seen them all before but somehow never quite this clear She just smiles, she don't want the world

This love she feels
seems like it's got thrown away
now how's she gonna live
It's ok, she don't want the world

A brand new morning shines she wakes up alone again this time to face the day she swears this time to make it as she simply walks away and it's ok, she don't want the world
