When this here and now has been and gone
And you're stretched out like some summer dawn
In a sleepy south shore town that yawns
In a lawn chair waiting for the flood to come
Where that sky is cracking over you
Letting sheets of lemon light leak through
Bathroom windows spinning round and you
In that mirror looking for someone you knew
Lover, let go,
And you will know
The dreams you hold will grow
And visions of such love will scold
The terror now that fills your soul
So lover, let go...
When it's late at night and the house is blue
From the moonlight dancing round your room
And you're all alone save for the kick
Of a second heart beats inside you, kid
Lover, let go
And you will know
That child delivered grows

And builds an ark of junkyard hope

Where you'll sail into the world in a flood of love

Where you'll sail into the world in a flood of love

Where you'll sail into the world in a flood of love
