There's terror in the eyes of the millions of oppressed inflicted by the residence of the nation's own best dressed.

The proletariat's grievances can be quelled with one swift blow;
right to the framework and the feeding grounds of the stratocracy they know

They're executed one by one for a heritage they pride and the world can make no consolation for the millions who died.

There's not one pursuit that can begin to cure the summation
of the damage done and the injustices apt men abhor.
And all that's on the mind of the country's head of state is to eradicate society's scourge, a prejudice fueled by hate.

The systematic genocide that left the nation torn is symbolized for the public's eyes and on the sleeve is worn.

It demonstrates a hate so blind it knows no bound or wall because of its malefaction it caused [a government/man's dignity] to fall.
