and though the fires are burning under the pillars of learning i hear the wind is still howling
"go home"
and looking out of your window you see a brave new tomorrow and no one is standing in your way when everyting is done
the war is never won
he's standing all alone
the russian winds blow cold his story must be told
the great one-handed brag through all the bodies decaying you come up smelling of roses you take the final decision to carry on you think of sweet josephine back home where fields were green and no sweat, no blood, no stench, no mortal coil.

(verse en francais)
oh
and the boys are all in retreat you'd better wise up and face defeat and half a million men lie dying
the story must be told
