wasting away in his room alone as thoughts carry him back back to a place called home where has daddy gone one could only wish he knew as the questions pile up the memories are few on the day he turned seven years old he waited by the mailbox in the cold watching from the window mom fears the broken heart of her son as he waited for the birthday card that was never gonna come it's been far too long

and does he miss him
nothing can replace
what we never had
where are you dad

now the years have been spent and he's a little older those days by the mailbox all seem a little colder he learned it's just life when daddy won't stay but he promised himself he'd be a better father someday

he takes a step outside and reaches to the sky he's touched by his father for the very first time he breathes in new life as the sun disappears returning tomorrow to burn away his fears reaching to the sky holding his head high
