My sight is faint, my hearing is gone it always tries to catch me off guard But I'm glad my eyes are closed now to not see or hear the house crumbling down

I'll come downstairs chasing your voice
And I'll find you there reading a book
The light through the windows filling the room
The shell of solitude starting to crack I'll kiss you on the lips and our time will be back

It grew between us when I was blind by your light it screams against me behind its fierce eyes It never matters how hard the strain the beast runs towards me hungry in its pain Biting and scratching mistaking its fears looking to escape with eyes full of tears
I'll come downstairs chasing your voice
And I'll find you there singing a song
The rain on the windows playing along The stark inner emptiness falling apart
I'll kiss you on the lips and our time will start
