I can see
I can the shift
Looks like year twelve really was a conscious lift
I can see
I can see the split
a schism in faith and flesh I believe it, I believe it cockalorum woos a peaceful dove mother and child cease to love a rooster calls and guards the nest how many stars shall rise in the west? like a white stone a bouquet of stars is thrown one hundred and eighty degrees away in the other direction men took pens and wrote it all down the motherland deemed them an evil terror barbaric and parted from the worldly crown providing us with great hope for our heirs forefathers, did you really believe in us? every man begotten from the waters stood coequal to slow erode in rust passing down to sons and daughters our sovereign albatross did you really, did you really go in for the win? what was it that was in your heart? so acquainted with ruling blood kin you scattered the pieces like a work of art I can see
I can see the shift
I can see
this is no leak nor a timid flow this is a flood I turn on the HAM radio hearing the faces play on ignorance
