The voice of loss comes to tell, the voice of loss was a cry for help.

Along came the dark surprise, the cruelest way to say goodbye,
There is always more than meets the eye,
Something's are never realized,
Should have seen the signs and heard your cry's,
Sometimes a smile can tell a lie,
Beneath the beauty and the grace, the wicked truth bared it's face.

You put an end to the story just to be somewhere else,
You put an end to the story just to feel something else.

You were needing, you were seething,
But you suffered, you suffered silently.

Disguise the pain with the bravest face,
Coz underneath there's a tarnished faith,
A seething tale, a blighted joy, a gaping hole an aching void,
Who could ever really, really know, the secrets of a lonely soul,
Who could ever really, really know, until the story turned so cold.

You were needing, you were needing, you were needing,
You were seething.

You were needing, you were seething,
But you suffered, you suffered silently.

You gave us warmth then turned us cold,
Froze our hearts and chilled our souls,
Now your chimes play in our ears like sweet bells of admiration,
The music weeps now you're gone away, the notes of loss will always play,
The piano cry's to the lonely rhythm, every sound brings your vision.

You were needing, you were seething,
But you suffered, you suffered silently.

Sleep now.
