color yourself, color yourself black and red
and when you find life slow and simple then you've grown against the grain but look at yourself, you've got your head held in your hands
there's proof you don't need to possess on command you color yourself, color yourself bitter gray in words you are outspoken, but too few hear what you say you break yourself and still don't understand conditioned to compete whether you lose or if you win touch all you see - surround yourself
but look at yourself, you've got your head held in your
hands
