(Daniel Barbe/Dominique Beauchamps) adaptation anglaise Dwight Druick

There's a child that's waiting somewhere out there Such a long forgotten time
With a heart that's praying, have a care and a world that's passing by

There's a river rushing to the sea, a tiny ocean in your hand
And the child that's waiting to be free is like a flower in the sand
To be so young and feel so small and wonder if you count at all To lie awake and ask the sky, how many flowers have to die ?

There's a heart that's beating everywhere in a child that sings a song
Of a place where promises are bright and a world where they belong
So very young, so very small, to wonder if there's love at all
To hold a hand against the sky and see tomorrow pass you by

There's a child that's waiting Waiting out there all the lost and lonely time With a heart that's saying "show me where there's a place for you and I"
And the children waiting everywhere are just like flowers in the sand Hold them closer now and show you care for little flowers in the sand
Tiny flowers in your hand, precious flowers in the sand.
