deep inside you
maybe i left a trace of light in the night between the walls not all the good people nor all those you know nor the flight from isolation in which you retreat (when despair erupts)
they're barely sufficient in front of raw power
limited and finite

passion is fractured
and what remains
and what doesn't exist
longing for death
desire for subsistence
yearning for freedom and a wish to bow to destiny like on a tray

a thousand tambourines
fanfare from a distance flags at halt mast
who are you mourning for my love black signs on the face of your treasure sorrow in words

once in life
i'll allow them to capture me a man a man with a cold grip
and iron glance
