"Your Majesty"

whose blood flows in the veins of the brave on which account lady do you hide your fear wake me up when in yourself you suddenly feel desire sometime before you leave
whose blood then flows in the veins of the brave say farewell and let the night swallow you
power
power and strength

whose face carries petrified time in the midst of pain used to screaming in sleep if you kiss me with the last spurt of desire i'll write that down as my victory from the countless possibilities to kill a man

whose isolation is hidden by intellect and blackness by the entire length of the empty hall in the wind
the smell of lavender mixed with gold and a fragment of love and no matter what changes people remain the same and the one-eyed justice for the blind in the dark and the victims that go nicely with the collage on your wall

power and strength
power
power and strength
