He cut the head off his neighbours wife, and he Put it in formaldehyde, and he Did not look back
He placed the head on his mantelpiece, where the Family-shots used to be, and he Poured a cognac

As the weeks went by
They saw eye to eye
They were meant to be
It was destiny

She was all he wanted
She was all that he'd been waiting for
He knew for sure, he knew for sure
She was all he wanted so he took her
From the man next door
He loved her more, he loved her more

A year had passed when his neighbour knocked on the door
And his heart just stopped, but he Said, "Please come in"
The next door man talked about his loss, but he Never knew just how close he was, 'cause she Looked straight at him

As the years went by
He quit asking why
They were meant to be
It was destiny

She was all he wanted
She was all that he'd been waiting for
He knew for sure, he knew for sure
She was all he wanted so he took her
From the man next door
He loved her more, he loved her more

She'd been his life, his guiding star, so he Took her out of her see-through jar, 'cause he

Knew it was time
He kissed her mouth, put her back inside, and he Laid down and there he died, next to His valentine

No one ever knew
No one had a clue
He was only missed
By the tax office

She was all he wanted
She was all that he'd been waiting for
He knew for sure, he knew for sure
She was all he wanted so he took her
From the man next door
He loved her more, he love her more
