I don't wanna tell you I love you and watch you wither away, wither away like a wildflower I picked and it died in an hour like it knew I stole its freedom and it'd rather die than live that way

I almost told you I loved you this morning over coffee but I caught myself I caught myself cause if I told you I loved you you might melt away on my tongue like spun sugar and disappear

but I don't want things to change why can't they stay the same don't wanna clip your wings those words are heavy things don't want it to fade
this lovely thing we've made

wait
I wanted to wake you up I wanted to say this right but I just lay by your side all night and watched you sleep
watched you sleep

the world is not your oyster it's a coffee shop and you're sitting there trying not to stare you're pretending to read your book but really you're just watching all the people it's a spectacle and you're there to catch the air
to catch the air

I don't wanna clip your wings
those words are heavy things

I wanted to wake you up
I wanted to wake you up
