falling across the line chasing that fire of mine I'm standing there, it's not the same in the silent rain, we're here again calling, but you deny a killing place, a broken sky and the strangest thing that caught my eye a little lie, and I don't know why

every you every me
this is what I've waited for and everybody knew that answer
every you every me
could have learned to give out more to read between the lines of laughter feelings, I thought I learned in faded light, well I was burned and I turned to you I saw right through

every you every me
this is what I've waited for

I'm falling in a hole that's getting further away that superstitious mind of yours got nothing to say I'm fighting all the life in me that's fading away to only hear your voice again to hear you say

every you every me
this is what I've waited for
every you every me
