The dog drug a wheel drawn in buffalo blood the circle of foxes made her struggle and tug

Then she dropped and she slept and she came back to life

So she opened the door and put her nose in the wind

She put a rock in her mouth and continued till night

The dog drug a wheel until she balanced her bite

In the East and the West in the North and the South

In the Beast laid to Rest and put Forth in her Mouth

Tied to ties that she hides behind every fox

She say her breath in the air in the morning light so she laid back down by her lover's side

There is some truth to this lie, no joke so look at your fire not the smoke
