In the morning i was comforted watching you from bed rushing off to catch your bus and kissing my forehead while i was busy making plans you held my life in your hands was it so long ago when there was a family close? and i have been holding on all alone, all along but maybe you're gone and maybe my family slipped away frozen here like mona lisa with a painted smile balls and caps and crayon drawings thrown into a pile

they no longer make the bed all these children in my head i am a father, sons and you are the holy ghosts and this is a lonely road i've been on, all along now maybe you're gone maybe my family slipped away the normal life passed me by what sort of life do you desire?

maybe one day
walking your dog you'll see me on the lonely boulevard you'll stop me
we'll have a drink to when at 10 you loved me time can bring us down but while i'm still standing up i swear to you, i vow to you you got me wrong and now i'm gone
