Texas Night Lovely senorita, Wanderin' by caught my eye

And as we danced I knew I'd never let her go,
The stars looked down flashin' out a warning
"Man beware" I didn't care, Lost somewhere 'tween midnight and the morning glow

Her Hair was black as ebony, her skin was soft and white
Her perfume filled my head with dreams, My heart beat like a tambourine

She whispered low something in Spanish, and flashed those green eyes
The moonlight and tequila blinded me to her disguise
Her lips like wine brushed against mine and as she lured me in,
I should've seen the Devil's Thumbprint plain as sin

Morning light through the tattered curtains
Hotel room, Clock says noon, I rubbed my head and feel a burning in my brain
She stole my watch, stole a hundred dollars, left me flat, but worse than that She took my heart and didn't even leave her name

Well I guess she made a fool of me, I bet I'm not the first My head tells me it's over now, but my heart can't help rememberin' how

She whispered low something in Spanish, and flashed those green eyes
The moonlight and tequila blinded me to her disguise
Her lips like wine brushed against mine and as she lured me in,
I should've seen the Devil's Thumbprint plain as sin

Her Hair was black as ebony, her skin was soft and white
Her perfume filled my head with dreams, My heart beat like a tambourine

She whispered low something in Spanish, and flashed those green eyes
The moonlight and tequila blinded me to her disguise
Her lips like wine brushed against mine and as she lured me in,
I should've seen the Devil's Thumbprint plain as sin
Yeah I should've seen the Devil's Thumbprint plain as sin
