(Jean-Pierre Bourtayre/Claude François/Jean-Michel Rivat/

When your worries get you down, and you want to leave the town
To walk where the blossom falls Wander by the willow trees, hear the message of the breeze
As birds sing their welcome calls

Get out of here, run to the station
And you would share a new sensation

Hou, go, go where the sun, go where the sun is brighter
Go, go where your heart, go where your heart is lighter
Go where there are flowers, know wonderful hours Know there may be showers, they can never last forever.
Go, go where the stars, go where the stars are clearer Go, go where the moon, go where the moon seems nearer
Go, you'll find a home there, go, you're not alone there Go, you want to roam there, cast your eyes on new horizons

Walking in the woods with you, you'll forget you ever knew
A time when life got you down Looking in the silver streams, you reflect on all the dreams
That don't have a place in town.

Get out of here, run to the station
And you will share a new sensation

Go, go where the sun, go where the sun is brighter
Go, go where your heart, go where your heart is lighter
Go where there are flowers, know wonderful hours
forever.

Go where the stars are clearer Go, go where the moon, go where the moon seems
nearer
Go, you'll find a home there, go, you're not alone there Go, you want to roam there, cast your eyes on new horizons.
