She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

He was a famous man but he was brought down

By an autograph seeker with a loaded gun

So they wheeled him in, they pronounced him gone

And only for a moment, they were alone in the room

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

Well, she had to think fast, she had to decide

Should they bury it with him or give it back to his wife?

Or would he want her to have it?

Oh, he might very well

It could sent her son to college or keep him out of jail

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

Well, she lifted up his hand and slipped the ring off

Dropped it in the pocket of her little white smock

What did it matter, would he miss it that much?

After all she was exited and a little shaken up

She'd always admired him, if only from afar

It's not every day you get to meet a superstar

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring

She took the ring off a dead man's finger, she took the ring
