Come outside and we'll take a walk you can laugh out loud no one will talk go barefoot and never feel obscene there's a girl over there by the windowsill and it looks like she got some time to kill and she says "nothing ever matters and what if it did?"

but you don't think that its so strange yeah and don't act so surprised well she's quite content in a state street state of mind there's a house next door where they never sleep and there's music coming from up the street its the song you know and so you sing the tune and we try to talk above the den about the world and the shape its in and then we laugh cause nothing seems to matter today but don't think that that its so strange and worthless in your eyes well we're quite content in a state street state of mind and the words speak the joy that underlies the pain the pain

the pain
the pain

well come outside and we'll take a walk years fly by, the plants trail off and you think of a time before you lost your way and the music played and the man displayed and the girl over there by the window would say nothing really matters anyway you don't think that its so strange yeah you don't act so surprised well she's quite content in a state street state of mind and he's quite content in a state street state of mind well we're all content in state street state of mind
