Washing away another shitty day
In the bathtub I lay, in my watered down decay
I try to scrub you away, but in my mind you stay
I see an image of your face and I feel so betrayed
Eating away at my skin, tearing away at my soul
If I were to live in your heart, I would find snow ain't as cold
You took my smile and turned it upside down
Cause you like me better when I'm wearing a frown
I hear your voice, it's a deafening sound
And I found your love for me 6 feet underground
Eating away at my skin, tearing away at my soul
If i were to live in your heart, I would find snow ain't as cold
Snow falls down from above, crushing me with the weight of a thousand sorrows
Tears frozen to my face, I try to break from the icy layer covering my body
But I find I am much too weak, I can't break free
The more i try to break free, the more I wanna stay enclosed in my arctic despair
I've been frozen here for so long, I wouldn't know how to react to sunlight
I fear it would burn my skin, so I will lock myself in this wintry home of mine
And spend the rest of my life in the cold unfeeling sanctuary
That i have grown to become dependent upon
